The Inexorability of the Specious

Ramsey Campbell quotes 'a literary agent's statement of his needs: "He would specifically love to see a super smutty horror novel that addresses big societal questions in a unique and compelling way." I should like to think this is parodic, but my fear is great.' (Facebook, 31 August)

Nnedi Okorafor reports: "The airport in Austin, TX has a gate for "Interimaginary Departures" and, Oomza Uni from the Binti Trilogy is on there! How cool!" (Facebook, 28 September) Other destinations include Lilliput, Moomin Valley, Narnia, Nessus, New Crobuzon and Pegana.

Paul Riddell was once again in the news with his famous anecdote about being investigated in depth by the FBI for joking – while at Texas Instruments – about selling missile secrets to the Daleks. 'I told them I would never sell us out to the Daleks, anyway ...The Cybermen or the Sontarans, sure! They pay more.' (Dallas Observer, 3 September) [AIP]

Somtow Sucharitkul is happy to be one of the three recipients of Thailand's 2024 Public Diplomacy Award, given for promoting the country worldwide through his works. (Facebook, 19 September)

Kurt Vonnegut is again vindicated as a prophet! The Sirens of Titan (chapter 6) features Schliemann Breathing, allowing humans to survive in vacuum or 'inhospitable atmosphere' by absorbing oxygen through the intestines. One of the 2024 Ig Nobel Prizes for offbeat science went to Takanori Takebe for finding that some mammals can actually do this.

(Xitter, 10 September)

Infinitely Improbable

As Others Fear Us. On book blurb/review terms that 'instantly make your heart sink [...] Top of my list is "dystopian". The minute the word hoves into view, that author and publisher have lost me. [...] Not unrelated to my phobia for dystopias are: "futuristic" (even if the novel is set only as little as five years hence); "fantasy"; "supernatural"; "sci-fi"; "horror". Alas, it is almost impossible to find a contemporary novel that doesn't boast one or more of these adjectives.' Also, this writer has never read J.K. Rowling or Philip Pullman because 'I cannot stomach magical realism.' (Candida Crewe, The Oldie Review of Books, Autumn 2024)

Awards. Booker Prize: the shortlisted novel closest to sf is Orbital by Samantha Harvey, set on the International Space Station. • The Arthur C. Clarke Award is now open to 2024 submissions (UK publications only).

Satire Dept. A wicked claim that US politician J.D. Vance 'is turning the stories he has created on the campaign trail into a sci-fi trilogy. / Called "Wokemare", the books depict "a dystopia ruled by a liberal elite, where the human race faces extinction because women have selfishly chosen to have careers," Vance said. "It's up to a federation of brave tech founders to reestablish order.'" (The Borowitz Report, 17 September) [GG]

Tongueslip. 'New cases of blue tongue have been identified in Norfolk ... the disease, which is spread by midges ...' (BBC1, Look East) [PE]

[AIP]

The Weakest Link. Clive Myrie: ‘The horror film villain Freddy Krueger, who attacks his victims in their dreams, first appeared in what 1984 film?’ Contestant: ‘Kramer vs. Kramer.’ (BBC2, Mastermind) [PE]

Without Comment. A.N. Wilson complains that rumoured candidates for Chancellor of Oxford University are all dull politicians unworthy of the Magical Dream That Is Oxford. His unexpected punchline: ‘If only J.K. Rowling had stood! A person of deep intellectual integrity, she is also, of all the great public figures of our times, the one who best understands the central part that magic still plays in our lives.’ (The Oldie, October)

Random Fandom. NaNoWriMo (National Novel Writing Month, every November) was widely criticized for suggesting that it was fine to achieve the goal of writing a novel in 30 days by having AI software churn out the words, and indeed that it’s ableist and classist to expect would-be writers to do their own writing. Is it coincidence that they have an AI-linked firm as sponsor? Three board members promptly resigned. [F770]

Scientific Comparison. On wildlife in Kent: ‘The bison will be able to roam 200 hectares of land after construction is finished, rather than the 50 acres they now have the run of.’ (i newspaper, 21 September)

Magazine Scene. F&SF for Summer 2024 appeared in September with a note from Gordon Van Gelder: ‘Ongoing production problems have led us to skip the Spring issue and to switch to a quarterly schedule.’ ● Titan Magazines is closing Star Trek Explorer (a market for fiction as well as news, interviews, etc) with issue #14 in December 2024. [KD]

Outraged Letters. Caroline Mullan on the shockingly inadequate coverage of Glasgow’s vibrant food culture in A446: ‘Sad that our haggis curry and black pudding dim sums did not make the cut.’

Court Circular. As a result of that legal challenge (see A446) to DC’s and Marvel’s joint trademark on the word “superhero” and its variations, and both companies’ mysterious failure to file a response, the US Patent and Trademark Office announced on 26 September that ‘the petition for cancellation is granted’. (Bleeding Cool, 27 September) [MS]

The Dead Past. 40 Years Ago, ‘Bob Shaw’s Fire Pattern has roused speculation; the hero rings an aging John Sladek to ask about spontaneous combustion in people, and can only extract flip, joky, content-free answers. Is Shaw needling Sladek, I was asked? Bob confesses: “John wrote all his own dialogue for that scene.”’ (Ansible 40, October 1984) ● 30 Years Ago, ‘Nancy Kress described the least flattering invitation she’d ever received, to join the team for Robert Silverberg’s Murasaki anthology (featuring Anderson, Bear, Benford, Brin, Pohl): “We have to have a woman, or we’re going to get killed!”’ (Ansible 87, October 1994)

Fanfundery. TAFF Books. For those who prefer print: the 2017 ebook The Frank Arnold Papers, compiled by Rob Hansen, now expanded by one-third with more of Frank’s nonfiction, is at last available as a trade paperback. See ae.ansible.uk/?t=FrankArnold. Meanwhile my own ebook Work for Hire scrapes the barrel of Langford contributions to long-ago genre reference works: free download at taff.org.uk/ebooks.php?x=Work4Hire. It’s hoped that the TAFF library may soon host GUFF reports as well.

Thog’s Masterclass. Bullet Trajectories in the Reacherverse. ‘It struck no obstacles, hit no buildings. It flew on straight and true until its energy was spent and gravity hauled it to earth in the far distance ...’ (Lee Child, Without Fail, 2002) [JG] ● High-Tension Romance. ‘This stranger was unfolding in my arms, roiling her thighs about the stiffened extension of my electrical being, sensations of her satin enclosure, the life pulsing in her coming out of its damp hiding to embrace mine, feeling like – this the picture in my mind’s eye replacing the bloody falling – electrical arcs furling and unfurling about an electrode.’ (John Shirley, Dracula in Love, 1979) ● Neat Tricks. ‘The blue eyes he’d inherited regarded him thoughtfully, hungrily, from within his mother’s face.’ ‘Alan glared and did not open his mouth in return. He was too busy breathing through it.’ (Freya Marske, A Power Unbound, 2023) [LA]
